/noce-weeter: pBluescript SK(-); Site_1: EcoRI; Site_2: XhoI; This library targets genes expressed in dormant tubers. This library was made from sections of dormant tuber, avoiding the buds and epidermis. Tubers were stored for one month post-harvest at 40°C. The tuber was peeled, well away from the surface. Then it was chopped into 1-2 mm cubes and immediately frozen in liquid nitrogen. This library is 191 g 235 t

Xhoj Tissue supplied by Christian Bachem and Richard Visser (Department of Plant Breeding, Wageningen University. The Netherlands). The CSTA libraries will attempt to capture the induction and initiation/initial growth of the tuber in an in vitro system as described in Bachem et al. (Plant Journal, 1996). Small microtubers develop from axillary buds attached to stem explants when placed on a high sucrose medium (10%). Visible morphological changes occur synchronously at day five in the axillary buds. The first library, cSTA (1-20) consists of axillary buds harvested on days 1-3. This targets those genes involved in induction of the microtubers. The following libraries, cSTA (21-40) and cSTA (41-60), capture genes involved in tuber initiation and outgrowth.
This library is noted as P3 in Tanksley lab notebooks."

/lab_host="Year parcons of RNA from a single genotype.
Separate cDNAs were generated using primers that incorporated unique 5' and 3' tags to distinguish each source of RNA. cDNAs were then pooled, size-fractionated, directionally cloned into a custom medium-copy vector and transformations made with four size classes to minimize size bias. Details of each source of RNA and library construction can be obtained at http://cgpdb.ucdavis.edu/
